The plants are grown at a place of production or a production site (including a plant growth facility) where M. enterolobii has not been known to occur or was known to occur previously but has been eradicated; and 2. The plants are inspected at the place of production or the production site during the growing season, and the growing medium and the underground parts of the plants are examined by an appropriate nematological test and found to be free from M. enterolobii . Therefore, the NPPO of exporting countries will be required to include an additional declaration stating that " Fulfills item 13 of the Annexed Table 2-2 of the Ordinance for Enforcement of the Plant Protection Act (MAF Ordinance No. 73/1950) ".

M. enterolobii potentially poses a significant risk to agriculture in Japan. To prevent the introduction of M. enterolobii into Japan, the emergency measures before the enforcement of the revision of the Ordinance for Enforcement of the Plant Protection Act are to be applied to the import of the plants as described in item 3 based on following newly information;

- M. enterolobii was isolated from underground parts, including nematode galls of E. trigona live plants during the import inspection. The nematode was identified as M. enterolobii using molecular and morphological method.
- E. prostrata and E. tirucalli could be determined as host plants for M. enterolobii (Lima et al., 2003; Souza et al., 2006).
